Anecdote of Havelock. In 1857, when, like a wave, the spirit of muting wesspreading over the continent, an officer was seen standing with head uncovered, beside an open grave in one of the cemeteries in Calcutts. He had come to pay the last office of respect to an assistant missionary, whose social status had been much interior to those of European birth and blood. The soldier was the only mun to whom all eyes were turged at this terrible crisis, and in a few days he was expecting to hasten to the scene of action. He was overwhelmed with work, and every moment was of consequence. "If it had been the funeral of some great «uo," said the soldier to his old pastor, Andrew Leslie, "I could have found a hundred excuses to have kept away; but this man was fai hful and true, and if he were thought little of for the uncoulances of his speech and the color of his skin, I feel it a privilege to shed a tear over his grave." The soldier was Havelock, for whom, in a few weeks, a nation mourned, and who will ever be regarded as one of the greatest heroes of his time. I was a common saying after the Indian mutiny that "the saints saved the emp're.' Certainly the heroism of the Havelocks, Out rame, Lawrences, Nicholsons, Hodsons, and others, will ever form one of the noblest pages in English history. If Lodia has been the training ground of some of our finest soldiers, it has also been the training ground for Christian de votion and zeal. At one time it was considered the satest policy to ignore Christianity, and this feeling more or less permeated every department of the service. Happily, those days are numbered with the past. Governors general and commanders in chief have feit it an honor to bear their testimony to the fact that mission aries have ever been the truest friends to progress and civilization, and the best supporters of the British rule in India. If every branch of the service were canvassed. it would be found that the men wno have been faithful to their convictions have best secured not sold at private sale prior to July 19th, the We receive to day from the factory a large the confidence of the people. The man with no religion is an anomaly to the natives of Indis which they cannot understand, and they Bo daist, Mohammed in or Christian, what is Half a century ago there were so few God fearing men that a child could count them. "I can rece meer," said a colonel in our hearing, "when there were but three Caristian theers to the whole of the Madras Presidency.

But there is c ruely a regiment now in which there is not one or more ready for every good word and work. There is scare-ly a solitary missionary now that has not to rejice over the countenance and help he receives from his own countrymen -An Indian Chaplain's Re collections. How to LIVE WITH ONE'S FRIENDS. -If you would be loved as a companion, avoid unnecessary criticism upon those with whom von live. The number of people who have taken out judges' patents for themsalves is very large in any society. Now, it would be hard for a man to live with another who was always criticising his actions, even if it were kindly and just criticism. It would be like living between the glasses of a microscope. But these salf elected judges, like their prototypes, are very apt to have the persons they judge brought before them in the unise of culprits. Our of the most provoking forms of the criticism above alluded to is that which may be called criticism over the shoulder. "Had I been consulted," "Had you listened to me," you always will," and such other scraps of sen tences, may round many of us of dissertations which we have suffered and inflicted, and of which we cannot call to mind any southing ef-Another rule is not to let familiarity swallow up all courtesy. Many of us have a habit of saying to these with whom we live such things as we say about strangers behind their backs. -There is no place, however, where real polities ness is of more value than where we mostly think it would be superfluous. You may say to your associates, but not less courteously, than you do to strangers. Again: we must not exp o more from the society of our friend, and companions than it can give; and, especially, must not expect con-

more truth, or rather, speak out more plainly, crary things. Intimate friends and relations should be careful, when they go out into the world together, or admit others to their own circle, that they do not make a bad use of the knowledge which they have gained of each other by their intimacy. Nothing is more common than this. and did it not mostly proceed from mere care essness, it would be superlatively ungenerous. You seldom need wait for the written life of a man to hear atout his weaknesses, or what are supposed to be such, if you know his intimate friends, or meet him in company with them.

Lastly, in consiliating those we live with, it is most sarely done, not by consulting their interests, nor by giving way to their opinione, so much as by not offending their tastes. "The most refined part of us lies in this region of taste, which is, perhaps, a result of our whole nature, and, at any rate, is the region of our most subile sympathics and antipathies.'

It may be said that if the great principles of Christianity were attended to, all such rules, suggestions and observations as the above would be needless. True enough! Great principles are at use but om of all thi gs; but to apply them to daily lite m my nule rules, precan lone and los gue are needed.
